

How to Get Credit for Your Hard Work

Getting the credit you deserve for the work you do is important. It helps your colleagues recognize the value you add to the company, it informs your career advancement, including pay raises, and it simply makes you feel good about how you spend your days.

But getting that credit is not something that automatically happens; sometimes you have to seek it out. And that's not always a natural thing for many people to do. Meghan M. Biro, founder and CEO of TalentCulture, is an expert at knowing how to navigate office politics. We asked her to share her advice on how a person can ensure they get credit when credit is due.
